EDITORIAL

Spring is definitely a little late this year in our neck-of-the-woods. We have had some very cold and frosty nights in April. Luckily our plum and pear blossom decided not to venture out! At the time of writing the trees are just coming, so if the temperature improvement of the last few days is maintained, maybe we'll get a crop this year (in spite of gardening in a frost pocket).

Because of the lack of blossom, we delayed putting the mason bees out. However by the 23rd a few were waking up, even in the chill of the fridge, so out they had to go. It seems that time may be as important as temperature in getting them moving.
